Following the softening of labour market in the US and expectation of moderation in inflation as well in May'23, investors are now hoping for an earlier than anticipated end in Fed's rate hike cycle. Initial jobless claims in the US rose by 28k for the week ending 3 Jun 2023, to reach 261k (est.: 237k) and 232k in the previous week. China's latest price also shows signs of economic recovery cooling down. Threat of deflation hangs as CPI remains close to zero (May'23: 0.2%; 0.1% in Apr'23). Core inflation fell (0.6% versus 0.7%) suggesting that demand for services is fading. PPI also fell further by (-) 4.6% in May'23 from (-) 3.6% in Apr'23, led by energy and metal prices. This also signals weakness in global demand.

- Apart from markets in UK, Japan and India (lower), other global indices closed higher. In US, macro data (jobless claims) suggests that the economy is slowing and Fed may remain on hold for now. In Europe, Eurozone entered recession in Q1 (-0.1% versus 0% as per 1st estimates), impacting the investor sentiments. Sensex fell by 0.5%, led by realty, auto, tech and banking stocks. However, it is trading higher today, while other Asian stocks are trading mixed.

- 10Y yields in developed markets pared back, with US (-8bps) and Germany (-5bps) falling the most. More than expected increase in initial jobless claims in the US and expectation of inflation cooling further down in May'23, has raised hopes of Fed ending its rate hike cycle soon. India's 10Y rose by 4bps, as RBI sounded more cautious on CPI in its policy briefing. However, following global cues, it is trading a tad lower at 7% today.
